

Survey Reveals Local Area as Church Minded

CANVASSERS FIND 2555

FAMILIES EITHER MEMBERS
OR AS LISTING PREFERENCE

Of 2784 families contacted in the Ocean Beach area in the religious survey completed last week by the Kiwanis club "Support of Churches" committee, only four families were found who expressed themselves as unbelievers. The committee, which consisted of Dr. F. R. Felt, President Martin Murphy of the Kiwanis and Henry Holman, report that 2555 of the families expressed themselves either as church members or as showing preference for some particular church. Only 128 homes objected to giving the information asked for in the survey.

Purpose of the survey was to help all the Ocean Beach churches in their various activities of serving the religious needs of Ocean Beach folks. The names and addresses and the listing of church membership or church preference was the information asked and recorded on one card to a family, and at the conclusion of the survey these cards were turned over to the particular churches listed on the cards. The following summary of the survey is provided by the committee, showing the number of families who either are members or have expressed a preference for the particular denomination indicated:

Bay Area Program To Be Discussed At La Jolla Today

A committee from Ocean Beach, Mission Beach, Pacific Beach and La Jolla will meet on Friday, (today), at luncheon in the Jamar Cafe, to discuss and make definite plans for the inauguration of a promotional program for the Bay area, The News is asked to announce. A contest is being planned which will give $500 in prizes for the best article or letter from residents in each of these communities, reflecting their opinion or offering forecasts of the changes that the Mission Bay development will bring to this North Shore district, or just why their particular community offers attractive resident or business prospect.

The prizes will be cash donated by the Baker Realty Company, and the judges of the contest will be a man from each of the communities covered. The contest is to close on March 1. Further details will be published after the first meeting of this committee, those in charge announce.

Among the judges for this contest will be Lt. Col. Rolin W. Shaw, secretary of the Ocean Beach Chamber of Commerce.

Parking Problems Discussed at Lions Meeting Thursday

Strong recommendations for improvements of traffic conditions in Ocean Beach were made here yesterday by a representative of the San Diego Public Works department. Vernon Parker of the department, in a talk to the Ocean Beach Lions club reported that the city intends to follow the recommendations of the local Chamber of Commerce in the re-surfacing of parts of Newport and Bacon streets. He pointed out, however, that existing traffic congestion here will soon tear up the surface again. Parker's suggestion to relieve present conditions was the installation of parking meters. In opening his talk, Parker touched on the work of his department in prevention of beach erosion, in street cleaning, sewage disposal, and other maintenance.

Report was made by President Bill Stone to the Lions of completion of a recent project to provide equipment used in therapeutic play by the children at Sunshine Crippled Children's Home in East San Diego. Lions Phil Sjoberg, Mel Bergstrom and Bill Stone in connection with the civic program of the club had been able to obtain and deliver to the home a section of glazed tile pipe. The pipe had been requested by the director of the institution for use on the playground in order to encourage the use by patients of muscles not otherwise used.

Auction sale conducted by Lion A. G. Bruce during the meeting raised money toward procurement of street signs giving the time and place of Lions meetings.

Bud Cooper of 4514 Osprey St., student at Dana junior high school has been spending the holidays with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Len Cooper, in Douglas, Ariz. Bud left Ocean Beach on the Saturday before Christmas and plans to return on January 5 in time to start school the following Monday.

Mrs. Halamuda Gets $25 From "People Are Funny" Program

In case any of the Ocean Beach radio listeners happened to be tuned in on radio station KFMB last Friday evening to the "People are Funny" program at 6 o'clock they already know that Mrs. Juanita Halamuda of 5119 Cape May Ave. was among the contributors. At her suggestion the station selected a man to go to homes in Hollywood, giving his own name and informing the resident that he was their newly elected congressman. Upon receiving no contradiction to this statement he encouraged the housewife to discuss changes she should like to see put into effect and to state her complaints as to city and state management. It seems that he went to seven homes and talked with seven glib housewives without receiving a single lifted eyebrow at his claiming to be their congressman. In fact it wasn't until he gave his story at the eighth home that he was called on the story. Even then housewife number eight had an unfair advantage as she had served on the election board in November and certainly should know her congressman's name. It might seem that the movie city residents are not as aware as we thought. At least there are seven housewives who are not interested in national affairs.

For her suggestion Mrs. Halamuda received $25 as prize money with which she bought collectors stamps for the convalescents at the American Red Cross Naval hospital in San Diego.

"These stamps" says Mrs. Halamuda, "will give the convalescents a hobby to help them through the long tedious time they have to spend in the hospital."

Governor Warren Calls For Health Insurance Action

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 3.—Governor Earl Warren will ask the legislature to enact a general health insurance plan financed from payroll deductions.

The governor declared in a press conference that details of the proposed plan await the results of a study now being conducted by a senate committee. He said the committee is expected to report its findings soon.

"The rising cost of hospitalization and medical care drive us to a realization that we must have a system of pre-paid medical care based upon the insurance principle which, by spreading the cost over a broad base, will enable every working man and woman in the state to provide adequate care for his or her family," the governor said.

"There is no adequate system of private health insurance which will enable the people of this State to protect their families, so we must strive religiously to get something done."

"I am hopeful that the people who in the past have opposed such a system will instead of blindly fighting it, open their minds and try to help find a solution to the problem if they do not agree with the plan proposed."

Mrs. James A. Fryer is visiting here from Salt Lake City, Utah, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Heber Hartvigsen, 4385 Newport.

Ocean Beach Had Attractive Entry In Jan. 1st Parade

Ocean Beach was well represented in the marine division of the New Year's day Harbor Bowl parade in San Diego. Leading the parade of boats was a new custom-built 18-foot mahogany speedboat built by the Mercury Marine Works, owned by Clarence Koehler of Ocean Beach. The beauty of the speedboat was matched by that of the three girls, attired in bathing suits, who rode in it. Two of these marine queens, Joan Garfield and Jacquelyn Lewis were Ocean Beach girls.

The elaborately decorated trailer on which the boat was mounted was drawn by George Fogarty's swanky new 1946 Buick Roadmaster convertible. Riding in the car with Mr. Fogarty were Bud Jennings, Commodore of the San Diego Speedboat Club, and John Martinovich. Both Mr. Fogarty and Mr. Jennings are Ocean Beach residents.

The float also participated in the parade in Balboa stadium prior to the Harbor Bowl game, one of only two of the many marine entrants so honored. San Diego Speedboat club, of which many Ocean Beach people are members, sponsored the entry.

New Construction Past Year Breaks All Records

Achievements Of Kiwanis Club For Past Year Cited

Achievements of the Ocean Beach Kiwanis club for 1946 were recounted at last week's meeting, held at Wallace Hall. Because of the regular meeting date falling on Christmas Eve last week, the session was held on Thursday, Dec. 26 instead. This week, account of the New Year's holiday, the meeting was held Thursday evening also.

At the business session, James J. Noel, proprietor of Noel's War Surplus store here, was admitted to membership in the club. His induction was by McLean Wilson, a past district lieutenant governor.

Secretary Harry Masters officiated as program chairman. Called on for the achievement reports were the following:

Forest Whedon, on the activities in behalf of Ocean Beach youth, including the kite, marbles and soap box derby contests and the planning for a Kiwanis "Key" club at Point Loma high school; also the gifts of kitchen equipment to the Door of Hope.

Arnold Morris, on the Halloween parade, which attracted 600 children participants and 2,500 spectators; and the sponsorship of Troop 28 of the Boy Scouts of Ocean Beach. "We enrolled 10 new boys, making a total of 33 members in the troop, 82 merit badges were awarded during the year and three courts of honor were held," he said.

Milton Lancaster, on the Cub Scouts, also sponsored by the Kiwanis. "We had 10 Pack meetings during the year," he said. "We as club members could well give more thought to the boys of the Cub age," he said. He asked for "more support to the Pack and to Cubmaster Philip Harris."

Bill Morlin, on the club's activity in the Community Chest campaign, "Around $1000 was collected in the local business district," he said. A total of $2600 was raised in the Ocean Beach district, Lancaster, who was district leader, reported, so "Ocean Beach went over the top."

Graham Rogers, chairman of the House committee, who stated that the one outstanding activity was the provision for the necessary additional room by changing the meeting place to Wallace Hall.

Dr. Frank R. Felt, chairman of the "Support the Churches" committee, he reported particularly on the religious survey recently completed. A detailed account of this activity appears in other columns of this week's issue of The News.

Dave Chandler, on the money raised for the welfare fund the past year.

Rollin E. Reed, head of the membership committee, who reported that 14 new members had been admitted to the club during 1946.

Dr. W. B. Oster, on program and on sponsoring organization of new Kiwanis clubs. He said that the new clubs sponsored included the Pacific Beach club and the Coronado club. Dr. Oster also reviewed in outline the programs presented at the regular club meetings throughout the year.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Weaver of 4772 Del Monte Ave. report they will celebrate their 47th wedding anniversary Sunday, Jan. 5.

LOCAL STUDENTS TAKE PART IN RADIO PLAY

Donald Freatman of 5066 Del Monte Ave. has written and directed the five minute radio play which may be heard over station KFMB Junior Spotlight program at 9 o'clock Saturday morning. This play which is a fairy tale, has two girls from Dana Jr. high school in the cast, Betty Haggerty of 4585 Tivoli and Sharon Balaria of 2911 Dickens St.

ESTIMATE BUSINESS HOUSES AND CENTER AT $500,000; SAME TOTAL IN HOUSES

Ocean Beach in 1946 by far surpassed all previous records and previous years in new construction of buildings. New business structures and the recreation center building alone accounted for a half million dollars and it is believed that the total for new residences, apartments and residence courts will total another half million.

Topping the list of new structures is the $100,000 new recreation center building on Santa Monica and Ebers, now practically completed. The new business blocks include several of the largest in Ocean Beach as the following list will indicate:

Cords and Home Appliance business blocks on Newport at the corner of Cable, Lowmes new store and apartment block, Firestone block, Homer's Variety Store, Marc's Sportswear, Veda Moss Shop, Newport Pastry Shop, Wood's Shoe store, and Royal Cleaners Building, all on Newport; Matovich - Carpenter block and Ocean Beach Bowl, both on Bacon; Sacred Heart Catholic church and Beardsley Funeral home, both on Sunset Cliffs Blvd.; Elves Variety Store, Catalina Nursery and Mission Bay Realty Co. on Voltaire St. and Beach 'n Bay Realty Co. on W. Point Loma Blvd.

In the case of the Cords, Home Appliance, Matovich-Carpenter and Lowmes structures, there are extra units, so the new locations for stores total close to 40.

The new residences, apartment buildings and courts, are so numerous that no attempt has been made to list them all. Two of the largest are on W. Point Loma Blvd. costing close to $100,000. On the houses, for example, 22 permits were issued during the past month totaling $138,000, list of which appears in another column on this page.

Not included in the above are numerous remodelings of and additions to business and other buildings.

Editor's Note: Should there be omissions in the foregoing list, we will be glad to publish same soon as reported to the Ocean Beach News.

Legion to Spend $15,000 For Vets Rehabilitation

Out of $250,00 allotted to California for rehabilitation of veterans by the American Legion in 1947, $15,000 is to be spent for San Diego county veterans, Fred Fish, San Diego area member of the California Rehabilitation commission told Clyde A. Wright Post 433 at the December dinner meeting held the evening of the 19th at the Woman's clubhouse. A spaghetti dinner, exchange of gifts and the singing of Christmas carols were features of the meeting. In the preparation of the dinner the chef's ability of Post Commander Wm. Brittan was highly commended by the Legionnaires and the Auxiliary, both units joining in this meeting.

S. G. Fold of Ocean Beach, second vice commander of District 22 and Mr. Stotts, first vice commander of the district, also spoke at the meeting.

Mrs. Myrtle Orrick, publicity chairman for the Auxiliary, provides for publication the following highlights of the address by Comrade Fish:

"There are to be a quarter of a million dollars spent for California in 1947 and $15,000 will be spent on veterans in San Diego."

"War I veterans remember conditions after they returned; they sold apples on the streets, and that was the reason for forming the Legion. It was years before the Legion got the Bonus bill through and more years before it was paid."

"War II veterans have benefited from the efforts of the Legion by receiving adequate mustering out pay. The Legion for their benefit and it has solved (Continued on Page 8)

 Quaker, Science of Mind, First Reformed, Fundamental Bible Church, Four-Square Gospel, Ros-ierucian, Calvinist, Bahai, Sufist, Metaphysics, Fellowship and Believer, one each.

The cards turned over to the churches no doubt will be of special help to them since many of the families are newcomers to Ocean Beach, and many are thus believed to be families with whom the local churches as yet have not been in contact.

Unusual Faiths Found

Such unusual faiths as Bahai, Sufist and Science of the Mind were found among the 41 different faiths listed in the report.

Of the total of 3402 homes visited by the canvassers, 618 of the families were not found at home and therefore were not contacted. This large percentage of absentees is believed to be due in large part to the busy Christmas season and to the fact that in the case of many of the homes all of the occupants are either working or in school.

Reporting to the Kiwanis club,
 the committee stated in part:

Covered 165 Blocks

"The survey covered the area from Mission Bay on the north through Azure Vista on the south, and from the ocean to Catalina Blvd. on the east. The area was marked off into 165 blocks and of these 122 have been definitely reported on by the canvassers.
 Several of the canvassers covered more than one block each, in some cases up to five blocks. All the ministers of the Ocean Beach churches cooperated with the Kiwanis club in making the survey.

"We are indeed grateful for the spirit of helpfulness and interest taken by so many of the church members of Ocean Beach.
 There was a generally fine spirit in the survey manifested in the homes visited, and we appreciate the kind reception given the canvassers by Ocean Beach residents.

"We trust that through this survey the Kiwanis club has been of service to the churches and community of Ocean Beach."

Canvassers Number 120

At least 120 busy people gladly took of their time to make the canvass. In view of that fact,
 The News gladly gives honorable mention to the following list, as reported by the committee, showing the folks who per-

 Chandler, Mrs. Shumway.

"SOUND OFF"

Question: What New Year's resolutions have you made if any?

"I have a rather extensive list of New Year's resolutions this year which I hope I will be able to keep. My first is to try to be more broad minded and adult in my attitude toward my competitors in business. Second, I will not be a party to the promulgating of war scare ideas. Third, I will earnestly try to take a more intelligent interest in civic affairs not only in my community but in my country."—John Stirling, salesman.

"I have made two resolutions this year, which to me, are very important, first, I am going to make a resolution to enlarge my scope of interests which I think will help to keep my mind young and growing instead of shrinking as I grow older. Second, I am going to try to do everything in my power to help make San Diego one of the safest cities for motorists to drive in, in the United States."—Charles Underhill, Metalsmith.

"I am not going to make any resolutions this year, as I don't seem to be able to keep them when I do so I have given up trying. There are a lot of resolutions I might make but it seems to me that one time of the year is as good as another for that."

 —Thelma Underhill, Art instructor.

"I am going to make a resolution that I believe many other women in Ocean Beach will make also, I am determined to lose at least 30 pounds in this next year.
 I do hope that I can stick to it."
 —Mrs. John Saville, housewife.

Question for next week: Do you think it would be a good idea for the merchants in Ocean Beach to keep their stores open later on Saturday evenings?

Mrs. Genevieve Ellsworth of Provo, Utah, left this week for her home after spending the Christmas holidays at the home of her son and daughter-in-law
 Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Ellsworth, 4844 Narragansett Ave.

Lieut. Commander R. W.
 Butcher of 4860 Narragansett Ave. recently received his permanent citation awarding him the Legion of Merit. This citation authorizes him to wear the "V" on his medal, denoting that it was earned in combat. The medal was awarded for Lieut.
 Comdr. Butcher's participation in the battles of the North Atlantic, during which his ship chased a German troller for 70 miles, forcing it to scuttle and taking the crew prisoners.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I: Spratt Herlong was a major producer of motion pictures. He called Elizabeth, his wife, to join him at lunch. Elizabeth knew that something was not going right at the studio and that her husband desired her presence, more to talk to her than to receive any real assistance.

CHAPTER II: At the start of World War I, Elizabeth had married. Her husband soon sailed for France and later was reported killed in action. Spratt was her second husband. This memory alone returned when she thought of Dick going to war.

CHAPTER III: Spratt phones Elizabeth that he is bringing Kessler, one of his new writers, for dinner the following night. Kessler, a German refugee who had been injured in the first war, was unknown to the Herlongs, Elizabeth's first husband.

CHAPTER IV: Elizabeth had been orphaned as a baby and raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa. She had been sent away to college, but during one summer vacation she went out to the country club to swim. There she had met Arthur Kittredge.

CHAPTER V: Elizabeth and Arthur had many dates the following days—swimming, dancing and hiking. They found that they were meant for each other, and despite all objections were married. Then the United States entered the war, and Arthur enlisted. After less than a year of married life, Arthur was off to the war. Then came the wire that Arthur was killed in action.

CHAPTER IX: Spratt was delayed for dinner. Cherry and Dick had invited Julia and Pudge, and were anxious to be off on a date. Elizabeth informed them that Kessler and his daughter would be there for dinner the following night and that Dick would have to entertain Kessler's daughter after dinner.

Spratt's visitor answered for him. "He wants to see the sketches, and we are no longer in conference, Miss Fraser." He moved forward in his chair, placed his heavy hand on the head of his heavy cane, and pushed himself into a standing position. It was not an easy movement, but he accomplished it with the skill of long practice. Lydia opened the door for him. A clever girl, she managed to make it look like a gesture of deference instead of necessary aid.

Their new writer could not stand without the support of his cane, and since he had only his right hand this made it impossible for him to open a door without pushing a chair toward it so he could sit down. Spratt had risen too, and walked over to the entrance.

"Then I'll pick you up at your office this evening, as close to six-thirty as I can, and we'll go to my home for dinner."

"Thank you, Mr. Herlong." He smiled courteously at Lydia. "And thank you, Miss Fraser."

Lydia went with him to the outer door of the bungalow, then returned to Spratt's inner office with the set sketches in her hand. "A remarkable man, Kessler," Spratt observed as he took the sketches.

"Isn't he? To sink into that script forty-eight hours and come up with a solution. And him half dead, too. Did the Nazis beat him up, or was he in the war, or what?"

"I've no idea. You don't ask about those things, though you can't help wondering. Maybe nothing but an auto accident."

"He does manage to bow from the waist in spite of it. Do you suppose he's going to continue forever calling everybody around here Mr. and Miss?"

Spratt laughed a little, and shrugged. "Probably. Germans are very formal. Never mind. I like him."

"So do I," said Lydia.

Meanwhile the subject of their conversation walked to his own bungalow, which was conveniently located next door, since his power of walking was limited to very short distances. Explaining to his secretary that Mr. Herlong was to call for him later, he went through the reception room into his private office beyond.

Alone, he glanced around the room with approval. It was furnished with only the necessities of his work—a desk with pencils and stacks of paper, a working-chair and an easy chair, a case holding reference books, a typewriter that wrote only capital letters and required no shift key. He had taught himself years ago to operate such a machine with his one hand. Bare as the room was, he liked it, for it had wide windows bringing in abundant light, and giving a view of the vast hills beyond the studio lot. A mirror on the wall reflected the hills, producing an impression of space and peace. Space and peace, he reflected as he looked around; this was what he wanted now, this was what they still had in America. The Americans took them both for granted. Even now there were some Americans who did not realize how precious they were, and how rare.

This reflection came to him of itself whenever he looked around. It occurred to him now, but he paid hardly any attention to it; he had another concern to occupy his attention. Tonight he was going to see Elizabeth. He was going into her home and see her there, surrounded by all the things she had ever wanted, and the prospect of it gave him a pleasure that was warm and tender, and none the less intense because while she had all these things she would never know that he had given them to her.

He went over to the mirror on the wall and stood there looking at his reflection. It was not possible that she could recognize him. Between them lay not merely twenty-four years, but the wreckage made by that shell at Chateau-Thierry, which had destroyed him so terribly that it had taken one of the greatest surgeons in Germany five years to put together the semblance of a body that he now possessed. A makeshift that had been uncertain enough in normal times, this frame of his could hardly, after the effort to which it had been forced when he had to get out of Germany, be expected to last much longer. It was only because he was sure he could not last much longer that he was willing now to let himself see Elizabeth. He had never expected to see her again. In those frightful days in the German hospital, he had not wanted to. He had wanted her to be rid of him, as desperately as he had wanted to be rid of himself. Even now he trembled when he remembered that slow, tortured rebuilding, insertion of metal strips to replace shattered bones, stretching of shrunken muscles, inadequate food and inadequate anesthetics, his own screams and curses at the man who persisted in keeping him alive when he wanted to die.

How that doctor had kept at him, with implacable hands that he himself could see only as instruments of horror, forcing into him the life he did not want, and slowly, through all of it, giving him against his will life that was really life—not mere physical existence, but a personality and a will, a re-creation so profound that it seemed quite natural, when he began to realize what was being given him, that along with all the rest he had a new name. Kessler—thank heaven, he had thought then, it was easy to say, for in those days the new language had seemed very difficult, though now it was so much his own that when he first came back to the United States he found that he had half forgotten the old. The doctor's name was not so easy. Jacoby. How he had dreaded that man at first!

He remembered Jacoby, in the days when he himself did not know a word of German, struggling through a scanty knowledge of English to make him understand what was being done to him, which he did not understand and hated Jacoby for doing, never dreaming then that he was meeting the greatest man he was ever to know in his life.

CHAPTER XI

He shivered with a cold gust of hate whenever he remembered how the Nazis had hounded that great man to his death for no crime but the unforgivable iniquity of having been born a Jew, and of being so rock-bound in his own goodness that he was incapable of accepting the evil of mankind until it had crushed him beyond escape. There had been little he could do in his love for Jacoby's memory, nothing but get to the United States while there was still time to save Jacoby's child.

His grief and rage at what had happened to his friend, and his terror lest he not be able to bring Jacoby's little girl to safety, had been so great that not until he was on the westbound steamer did he realize that when he got to America he was probably going to see Elizabeth. He knew her husband's name was Spratt Herlong and that he was employed by Vertex Studio, and in his own luggage was a contract signed in the Paris office of Vertex. He would be virtually sure to meet Herlong some day, and it might follow as a matter of course that he would meet Elizabeth. He went into his cabin and looked at himself a long time in the glass, as he was doing now. If there was a chance of her knowing him he would break his contract and make a living as a translator, a clerk, anything that would provide little Margaret with three meals a day without destroying Elizabeth's peace of mind.

But a long scrutiny satisfied him that there was no chance of it. In no sense, except the memory of her behind all that had happened since that explosion at Chateau-Thierry, could he believe he had any trace of the Arthur Kittredge she had known. He was Erich Kessler, dear friend of the late Dr. Gustav Jacoby, author of books based on case histories of Dr. Jacoby's patients, and the change in his personality was as thorough as the change in his name. No man who had endured what he had endured in body and spirit could have much left in common with a happy, arrogant youth who did not know what it was to want anything he could not get.

He looked thoughtfully at his image in the glass. Crippled as he was, his appearance was not repulsive. One could see that in spite of his uncertain legs he had been meant for a tall man, and since his torso had to carry his weight the muscles there were powerfully developed. The effect was inevitably one-sided, since his left sleeve had been empty so long, but his right arm was like that of an athlete, and the hand which for twenty years had supported him upon a cane, was strong enough to break a china cup between the thumb and fingers. His face had no visible trace of the wound there except a scar that went upward from beneath his beard in a thin curving line. His hair was still thick, gray like steel; his beard was heavy too, and darker. He had let it grow with no thought of disguise, but to cover the scars that all Jacoby's careful skin-grafting had not been able to eliminate. Now he was glad he had it and was so used to it, for in spite of having seen thousands of Hitler's pictures most Americans still thought of Germans as being professors in dark beards.

She would not know him, but he would know her, as readily as he had known the picture standing on Spratt Herlong's desk. To be sure, he had been looking for it, but he would have recognized it anyway as Elizabeth. She had changed in those years, of course, but her alteration had been nothing more than the well-ordered development from youth into the maturity that could have been foreseen by anyone who had been as intimately acquainted with her as he had. Elizabeth had always known what she wanted out of life, because she was so eminently fit to have it. Physically and spiritually, she had wanted love, marriage, children, a home in which she would be no petted darling, but a versatile and devoted creator. From the beginning she had instinctively known herself capable of bringing all this into being, and so she had looked forward to it with the eagerness of those who have no doubt of their destiny. When he met Spratt, and saw the pictures of Elizabeth in Spratt's office, he felt that the change time had made in her appearance had been no more than the change one observes in the achievement of something of which one has seen the beginning. Now that he could think of her without the pain of the earlier years, he was glad he had been wise enough to step aside so that she could have it.

He saw the pictures last week, on the first day he went into Spratt's office. Spratt had been talking for some time about the script, and if Kessler's attention had wandered it was no matter, since he was going to read the script tomorrow anyway. When Spratt had finished, and he himself had risen to leave, he glanced at the photograph on the desk, saying with the casualness of a man of years of self-command, "Your wife, Mr. Herlong?"

Spratt said, "Why yes," taking up the picture and handing it to Kessler with the proud smile of a man showing his friend a treasure. "But that's not very good of her—at least, I never did think those formal portraits were as good as candid shots, too smooth and pressed-out, if you get what I mean."

"Yes, I understand and agree with you," Kessler was looking at her face. "But this is very charming."

"Oh yes, so it is, but this one on the wall looks more like her. Over here by the door. Those are the children with her."

Kessler looked at Spratt and looked at the picture on the wall. "Yes, yes," he said with involuntary eagerness, "that, I am sure, is more like her."

For it was like her, he knew that without having seen the original in so long. The picture had been taken somewhere outdoors, perhaps on a ranch. Either Elizabeth and her children did not know they were being photographed, or the photographer was a genius at creating an unposed effect. Dressed in a sweater and skirt, her hair blowing, Elizabeth sat on a fence beyond which grew an orange tree; a young girl leaned on the fence near by, while a tall youth who looked very much like Elizabeth was standing by the tree, pulling its branches forward between his mother and sister so they could pick off the fruit, and a little boy, sitting on the ground in front of the fence, was already peeling the skin off an orange. By accident or design, all the children were looking at their mother, and they were all four laughing. It was a group of healthy people who loved one another and were very happy about it. No wonder Spratt preferred it to the studio portrait on his desk. That was Elizabeth as she appeared to other people, her private life discreetly concealed behind a pleasant tranquility of eyes and lips, but this was Spratt's wife as he loved her. Looking at the group, the outsider from Germany knew more profoundly than he had ever known before how much he had given Elizabeth when he had made up his mind to leave her free of his own wreckage. He glanced at Spratt, who was looking not at him but at the picture of his family, and for a moment he hated Spratt so fiercely that he could have killed him. But that passed quickly; long discipline had steadied his emotions as much as his conduct, and after that moment of hatred he felt nothing but gladness that his gift to her had been as great as he had meant it to be.

Today, alone in his office, he let his memory go back to the days when he had realized he had to do this because he loved Elizabeth too much to do anything else. The first days after the battle were nothing but confusion, fever and pain. He was in a place where there were a lot of other men on other cots, and women with pale harassed faces trying to take care of them, but he could not understand anything that was being said or anything that was done. He was strapped up in bandages that were far from clean, and among the people around him was a man gaunt as an ascetic, who came over now and then and did various horrible things to him. He did not know then that in those closing days of the war in Germany there was not cloth enough for fresh bandages or soap enough to wash those that had been used, or drugs to relieve suffering, or that his attendants had white faces and shaky hands because they were not getting enough to eat. Even when he began to discover this he did not care, because by that time he had begun to discover also the extent of the damage these Germans had done to him. He had no doubt that he was going to die, and the only wish he was strong enough to make was that he might die quickly and get it over.

Babbling in the only language he knew, he begged the gaunt cruel man to let him alone. At first the doctor seemed to be paying no attention, but one day his patient observed that he was talking, and after several repetitions the ungainly syllables acquired meaning. The doctor was saying, "Forgive me that I hurt you."

His accent was so thick as to be almost unintelligible, but the fact that he had any English at all gave a flash of hope to the mangled object on the cot. Any effort was torture, but if this fool of a doctor could be made to understand that a dying man wanted nothing more than to be left in peace, it was worth the effort. His own words were muffled because of the bandage on his chin, but he managed to get them out.

"Listen to me. I am not one of your countrymen—you know that, don't you? My name is Arthur Kittredge. I am an American. Your enemy—don't you get that? I am going to die anyway. Why don't you just let me do it?"

The doctor said something. Arthur did not understand it until it had been repeated several times, and when he finally caught the words they were not worth the trouble of listening, for all the doctor said was, "Quiet. You be quiet."

Arthur tried again, desperate with pain and weakness. "Do me a kindness. Give me something to finish it, won't you?—Please listen! I'm talking as plain as I can! Finish it. That's not much to ask, is it?"

Again the doctor said, "Quiet."

"If you don't care about doing a kindness to me, do it for somebody who can get up again—one of your own men. Why should you let me fill up a bed when German soldiers are lying on the floor? Or waste food on me when you haven't enough for your own? Don't keep me—"

His words ended in a gasp of pain. But he still looked at the doctor, too weak to say any more but conscious enough to plead with his eyes. Whether or not the doctor had understood all his words, he had grasped enough to know what Arthur wanted. He shook his head. "No," he said. "No." Exhausted as he was, Arthur could see him groping for more words. Mustering all his strength, Arthur managed to say again,

"I am going to die anyway."

"No, no. You are not going to die."

He spoke with a grim resolution that seemed to typify all Arthur had ever heard about the coldness of Germans and their inability to understand any reason why they might not always be right. Arthur was not able to form any more words, but he looked at the doctor with eyes that Jacoby told him later conveyed all his rage and disbelief. Arthur knew he was going to die and he wanted it over. But Jacoby's thin face had no yielding in it. Jacoby left him then, but he came back later, and this time his bony hand brought up a German-English dictionary out of his frayed pocket. Even with this aid, his English was so poor that he could convey nothing but a repetition of his refusal. Alone in his prison of pain, Arthur thought, "At home they'd shoot a dog that had been smashed by a truck. But this can't last much longer. It can't. If I hadn't been so healthy it would be over by now. But, have these people no mercy at all? I'd shoot the most heartless German under heaven before I'd let him die a death like this."

He was glad Elizabeth could not see him. She would never know anything about this lingering torment. They would simply tell her he was dead and she would think it had been quick and clean. "He never knew what hit him," they would say to her, and at least it would be easier for her than if she had to know how long it had taken him to die. And of course he did have one thing to be thankful for—if that shell had hit him, he could be glad it had done its work. He would be dead and done with, and would not have to go back to her a half-human caricature of what used to be her husband. Though that wretch of a German doctor refused to shorten this last phase, though he might be beast enough to enjoy seeing one of his enemies get what was coming to him, even he could not indefinitely prolong it.

But at last Arthur discovered, with a revulsion that he could not have expressed if he had known the whole dictionary by heart, that this was exactly what the doctor meant to do to him.

Jacoby had been trying to talk to him for some days. Arthur had ceased trying to understand him. He had about given up trying to do the only thing that interested him, which was to refuse nourishment and get it over that way, for they fed him through a tube and he was too weak to resist. He hated the sight of the doctor with his gaunt face and thin cruel hands. But though he could not resist him, he did not have to listen to the man's awkward manipulations of the English language and try to make sense out of them.

However, the creature persisted, talking to him with many references to his dictionary. Unable to pronounce Arthur's name, he called him Kitt. He kept telling him something, in a low, insistent voice. He kept at it so long that at last one day the words he had been hearing arranged themselves in Arthur's mind and became an orderly sequence. Stripped of its grotesqueries and repetitions, what Arthur understood went like this:

"You are not going to die, Kitt. You will be alive a long time. Not as you were. But you have your eyes, your hearing, the jaw will heal and there will be a hand. I think you will be able to sit upright. Walking I cannot promise, but I will try. It will be long and hard. But work with me, Kitt, and I will work with you. Do you understand me? You are not going to die."

Arthur made an inarticulate noise. He looked at the doctor's steely blue eyes. They were fixed on him with a determination that made Arthur feel that this fellow was regarding him not as a man but as the subject of an inhuman experiment. Instead of letting him go, Jacoby was going to keep him conscious for years to come, simply to prove that he could do it.

CHAPTER XII

What was left of Arthur quivered with rage. "You brute," he said, "you damned brute." He continued with epithets worse than that. He had never been addicted to profanity and was surprised to find such language coming so readily to his lips. But the words were there and he used them, and continued using them every time he saw the doctor.

Later he asked Jacoby if he had understood anything of what he had been saying then. Jacoby smiled with the grim humor Arthur had learned to recognize. "Not the vocabulary. But I did not need the vocabulary to understand what you were saying to me, and just then I did not blame you."

But at that time Jacoby paid no attention to the protests. He simply left Arthur there to contemplate his shattered body and go wild with the prospect of being forced to live in it. There was nothing else Jacoby could do. He was working eighteen hours a day, on a pittance of food that in pre-war Germany would not have been thought enough for an idle man. Besides, since he knew so little English and Arthur knew no German at all, he had to let Arthur go on believing what he believed.

There was no way then for Jacoby to explain that four years of this war had almost annihilated his faith in the human soul. There was no way for him to say that he too was on the edge of despair, searching desperately for some reason to believe that men could be saved from the evil they had wrought.

Before the war, Jacoby had never doubted the essential worth of the spirit. He had not thought mankind was perfect or likely to become so, but he did respect his fellowmen because he thought that for the most part they deserved it. He had no patience with those contemptuous pessimists who shrugged at the human race as though they had looked it over and decided that it would never amount to much. To them he had been accustomed to say, "Most people have a lot to put up with and most of them put up with it very well. I know some of them are fools and scoundrels, but there's a lot of courage in the world, and a lot of quiet unostentatious nobility. People in general are all right, and you'd find it out if you'd take the trouble to know them better."

That, expressed in homely language, was his faith in the fundamental value of life. He had believed in it. But that was in the pleasant days before the war.

Then came the four years he had just lived through. The physical wrecks brought to him had been dreadful enough, but they were not the worst. Some of those he could heal and some he could not. But he had been appalled, sickened, and at last reduced almost to hopelessness as he saw the disintegration of humanity. He had seen men turned into brutes incapable of any emotion but hate, he had seen it over and over, so often that he wondered why he should be trying to save their lives when they had nothing left that made them fit to live. The fury and terror around him had come close to uprooting all the confidence he had ever had in men's being fundamentally better than this. He wanted to believe they were. If this was all they were good for, the sooner they destroyed themselves the better. It was very hard, in this last year of the war, to go on believing in anything.

Arthur had been brought to him when he had begun to feel himself giving in to a brutal cynicism. When he examined Arthur, he suddenly felt that there was a man who could prove the ultimate test, not of human courage to overcome disaster. When this American realized what had been done to him his mind would be black with hate and horror, even if it had never been before. At first he had wondered if he had the right to prolong such a life as this. But after several of those examinations under which Arthur had screamed and cursed at him, Jacoby had convinced himself that with labor and patience he could guarantee that his patient would not be helpless. Arthur would have something to work with. If he could be made to use what he had, and with it regain any wisdom or generosity in spite of what he had lost, Jacoby promised himself that he would take it as meaning that humanity could do the same. As he worked with him, as he saw Arthur's fury and

FINAL BALLOT FIGURES

The final tabulation of votes cast in California in the November election reveals some interesting facts. It shows, for instance, that Governor Earl Warren, who virtually clinched his re-election in June by capturing both the Republican and Democratic nominations, received the greatest number of votes ever cast for a candidate in this state.

His total of 2,344,542 topped the record set by Hiram Johnson in 1940 when the late senator polled 2,238,899.

The final tally also confirmed the fact that none of the hundreds of individuals—including Kilroy and Superman—who were candidates for the short-term senatorial office were successful in temporary displacing Senator William Knowland who wound up more than a quarter of a million ballots ahead of Will Rogers Jr. in the fight for the six-year post.

The official count reveals that no less than 1,624,322 Californians who were registered did not actually go to the polls. In other words, more than one out every three registrants failed to vote. It is evident from this that the minority, rather than the majority, rules.

And this shouldn't be.

"NOTHING FOR SOMETHING"

If you've been reading about the trio who cleaned up more than $100,000 in Las Vegas, Nevada by working their "system" at the roulette table it might be well to count to 10, or better still, to 10 million before you start getting too impressed with the possibilities of getting "something for nothing" either at the roulette table or any place else.

From all reports it is true that the three men came out $103,700 ahead. And from all reports about money, $103,700 is a rather convenient, if not downright pleasant, sum to have on hand.

But for every person who makes a "killing" like this, or who even comes out ahead on any out-and-out gambling scheme, there are thousands who come out with nothing but sad experience, and an empty pocket.

The desire to "get rich quick" is not an unusual desire. It seems to be part of human nature.

In recent years a large number of people with decidedly limited capital have been trying to fulfill this desire by "playing" the stock market. Now, the buying and selling of stocks is perfectly legitimate of course, but the market is no place for the man with little money and less knowledge of what it's all about.

The one sure road—if not to riches—at least to eventual financial independence is to save your money. Put it in a bank. Add as much to it regularly as you can. This won't give you "something for nothing" but at least you will avoid the unhappy experience of getting "nothing for something."

NATIONAL DEBT

A study made by the late Brigadier General Leonard P. Ayres, noted economist, just before his recent death shows how the United States has come out of five important wars from the financial angle.

After winning our independence from Great Britain the per capita debt in the country was $19. Three decades later after the war of 1812 it was $15 per capita. After the civil war the national debt was the equivalent of $78 per citizen; in 1918 it was $240, and now it has leaped to $1,981. To put it another way, we owe 100 times more per capita now than we did following the Revolution; 25 times more than after Lee's surrender; and eight times more than when the Kaiser called it quits.

That's plenty. And, incidentally, nobody should pass it off with the bland remark that it doesn't matter much since "we owe it to ourselves." We don't. We owe it to each other—and that's vastly different.

If you lend your next door neighbor some money that debt exists within the national "family," but your neighbor doesn't owe the money to himself, he owes it to you. And you want your money back in due course.

So do the individuals and organizations which have loaned money to Uncle Sam.

Gob: Again?

Gob: Yeah, this is the second time I've felt like it.

She: What does kissing have to do with the hereafter?

He: That's what I'm here after.

"Of course I do."

If you didn't know it, near the top of a ship's mast is a cross piece called the "yardarm," and down near the water level is the "boom," used for tying up small craft.

A young officer, not familiar with all sea-going terms, recently caused a catastrophe when he got the two confused. He was on duty when a small boat approached, commanded by a coxswain. Shouted the officer through a megaphone, "Tie up at the yardarm and secure!"

The small boat backed up and began circling the ship. After 20 minutes of this, the young officer called impatiently to the coxswain, demanding an explanation of his antics.

Finally, the coxswain called back, "Doing my best to comply with your orders, sir. We're just trying to get up flying speed!"

Sweet young thing: "What should I do? I'm engaged to a man who simply can't bear children."

STATE COLLEGE NEWS

(By Claire Hollobaugh)

Now that the New Year has been rung, cheered and toasted in, resolutions made and broken, and the thought of returning to school uppermost in our minds, let's turn the calendar back for a moment and find out how the Ocean Beach Aztecs welcomed the holiday spirit.

The Inter-sorority Christmas formal held at the La Jolla Country club last Thursday brought a sizable representation from Ocean Beach. Carmen Price of 1775 Ebers was chairman of the dance. Those attending were Dorothy Shepherd, Jane Price, Vi Daly, Maryolive Cobb, Mildred Van Gessel, Jack Blackwell, Ed Klosterman, Richard Albrecht and Jack Hamblin.

Rosamund Decker of 4926 Coronado reports lots of snow in Rochester, New York. She plans to return to San Diego Jan. 6.

One of the luckier Aztecs is Carlton Bingham of 4977 Santa Cruz. Carlton was in Pasadena for the Tournament of Roses and the Rose Bowl game.

Bob Oversmith of 1121 Savoy is making plans for a skiing trip at Yosemite National Park.

The Point Loma Alumni dinner drew some Aztecs to the portals of the Shalimar club Dec. 27, including Richard Albrecht, Jack Davis, Ed Klosterman, Jack Blackwell, Mat Hegeler, Jack and Bill Hamlin, Alan King, Art Bradshaw and Bob Senica.

Charlene Rocco of 4912 Cape May entertained three couples at the North Island officer's club New Years Eve. This week-end Charlene is planning to go to Santa Monica.

Carlton Elswick of 1637 Sunset Cliffs Blvd. is planning a trip to the Cuyamaca Mts. and the snow.

A beautiful gold compact was received by Irene Kennedy from the Tau Delta Chi fraternity for her help in decorating the hall for the Goblins Gallop, fraternity dance, given last October.

Seen at Camp Kidd Dec. 27 were Mildred Freakly, Nancy Williams, Mat Hegeler, Jack Hamlin and Pat Murphy.

Maryolive Cobb of 3904 Wildwood Rd. was one of the many sorority girls to go caroling at the Naval Hospital Dec. 22. She also was seen at the Omega Xi's Christmas formal and the Phi Kappa Gamma's Christmas dance.

New Year's Eve Mildred Freakly of 4469 Santa Monica attended the Phi Lambda Xi's New Years formal in the Crown room of the U. S. Grant.

A recent trip to Los Angeles was made by Betty Schumacher of 4343 Newport.

The Chi Thetas are headed for the Laguna Mts. this week-end and with them goes Nancy Williams of 1725 Sunset Cliffs Blvd. Nancy also was present at the Sigma Lambda New Year's Eve party.

Those attending "Holiday" Delta Chi Phi's Christmas formal were Vi Daly, Mildred Van Gessel, Dick Odom, Bob Guevara, Fred Kraft Jr. and Bob Wedgewood.

Arthur Bradshaw of 3568 Quimby St. is another Aztec
